Workshops are held Tuesdays from 7:00 pm—9:00 pm at 6208 Quinpool Road, 2nd Floor, Halifax unless noted as a workshop + tour, or a Dartmouth Location

Activities at Your Finger Tips (Extra $5.00 materials charge) (Repeat)

This workshop will focus on helping you organize and prepare high-interest, developmentally appropriate activities that can be pulled out at a moments notice. We'll explore the value of having "practical life" experiences and other hands-on learning materials organized on trays, and in bags, so that they are readily available throughout the day. Together we'll explore how these activities can be adapted for a variety of ages and developmental levels. You'll leave this workshop with a handful of great ideas and an activity to take away to get you started.

Practical Life : A Montessori Approach to Engaging Children in Learning

Engaging children's interest with everyday domestic materials and activities is a cornerstone of the Montessori approach. Attractive, inviting, and functional—practical life work trays maximize independence and help children develop a sense of order, concentration and coordination. Come learn how these materials are designed, created, and used at Maple Tree Montessori. You'll leave with a booklet of ideas to try. ($5.00 Materials Charge)

Michelle Cleary is a trained Montessori teacher who received her Diploma from the St. Nicholas Learning Centre in London, England. She started Maple Tree Montessori as a part-day preschool in 2002 and expanded to a full-day program in 2007.

Oh Mr. Sun, Sun—Sun Safety for Child Care Programs

It turns out that it might not be such a bad thing to have Mr. Sun hiding behind a tree—especially on days when the UV index is moderate or above. Learning about the dangers and long-term health implications of over-exposure to the sun is an important first step in developing and following sun-safe policies and practice in early childhood settings. We'll also discuss strategies for communicating the sun-safe message to parents and other caregivers.

Carrie Melson is the Coordinator of the NSCECE Early Childhood Educator Resource Centre. As someone with a major sunburn history the information about sun safety was long overdue. Helping others avoid the risks is a new goal.

I've Tried Everything and Its Not Getting Better

There are times when it feels like you have tried everything to change a child's behaviour and nothing makes a difference. When it feels like that, it's time to consider that you might be accidentally reinforcing the behaviour. Children do what works. Understanding the function of the behaviour and why a child is persisting with it is often the key to helping the child find a more acceptable way to get that need met. Come prepared for a frank conversation about how we can sometimes make things worse when we're trying to make them better.

The Teaching Pyramid: A Thinking Tool for Programs

The Teaching Pyramid is a framework used to support positive social and emotional development in young children and to address the challenging behaviours that sometimes occur. There are four levels to explore and think about. The pyramid is based on a foundation of positive relationships, supportive environments, teaching social skills, and interventions. Together we will explore this framework and use it as a tool to think critically about our learning environments. Looking for the long-term and not the quick fix? This is for you!

Cathy Ramos has been working with young children for over twelve years. She is the director of Mawio'mi Child Care Centre, a lab school for the Nova Scotia College of Early Childhood Education. Cathy is also taking Masters level courses at MSVU.
